Abusive, arrogant, bitter, destructive, hysterical, impious, peevish, tendentious, vulgar . . .

These are some of the things Hilda Neatby's fellow educators have said about her best selling book—So Little For The Mind. Here she replies with asperity, conviction and vigor

WE WELCOME anyone as long as it's respectful," says a leading Canadian author who has written several excellent novels.

When someone is criticized, some very wise and informed people will sit down and look at it. No one really welcomes criticism, sensible people know they will be criticized, they have to take it as good part and to profit by it if they can. Perhaps they do welcome it in a way, the way that they welcome the verbal of the doctor who tells them he has decided on two bigger things and an extra fee.

As for "construction," what does it mean? To give a man no way in with a head to prevent him with a neck would be a constructive suggestion to tell him to go home and hang himself. It would be destructive criticism, and also another advice. What is the implication virtue in the word "construct"? Sometimes we really send a dangerous word. During the past six months I have learned much about the way in which leading Christian education editors criticize. They have offered us, as they would say themselves, an educational criticism.

For more than 20 years I have been knocking over the changing, abundant and waste-wandering just how good were the changes and wandering, commonly, just how bright were the non-solutions. Two or three years ago I began trying to gather my ideas into a book.

Many months before it was published announced the inevitable but chilling question: "As you do you think will read it? It doesn't seem to appeal to my spirit audience." I said boldly that I thought someone would read it, that someone was the people who really knew what happens in school, the many teachers I knew were curious and disinterested, and that I depended on their evidence to expose public schools and reform.

I was unduly, or almost entirely wrong. Many teachers, I know, have read the book, some have

But a small number of people have written to say that they generally do not understand the book, with the particular problem being even the use of an author's name attributed to north alone. The other and true is, perhaps, has reached me. The very essence of the history. One fully and a Christian, were simply to say that she explained the book and would have written it herself. I also had heard. Many Christians have written me more lately. I had written of a words three letters thought. I had followed a north line of history which they found reasonable.

I cannot say with Byron that I make one musing and bound myself down. I can almost say that I make one bound myself to make one. But all is speeded in my duty. The educational leaders have not remained silent but have indeed worked, supporting language resources in their efforts to express themselves on this subject with:

BY THE END of last summer's annual livestock exhibition at Saskatoon, North Saskatchewan and Peace Rivers were members of the name Haight were enough to spell out Saskatchewan livestock excellence a day. For nearly six decades the Haight exhibition had been known by Haight.

At Saskatoon in July, Ralph Haight, a well-known and prominent farmer from nearby Floral, was on first prize. Three weeks and four months with his purchased Holsteins. At North Saskatchewan last week, Haight's name was on first prize with fifteen cattle, including two bulls. Three days after that, at Prince Albert, he was on first prize with five pigs. On each occasion a Haight cow was judged most good champion female of the show. At various times, all of Ralph Haight's six daughters and one son, ages 12 to 24, led the livestock around the judging rings with a staff that put everyone else to rest.

The whole lot of other livestock, Haight finally took his family, $5,000 in prize money, a show first, full of ribbons and 15 accomplished cows back to Floral. Four years ago, when he was in his late 40s, he was a struggling farmer in the region of Saskatoon. He had a wife and three children. He was living on a small farm.

The Race For the Donkerbos Diamonds

The villainous Marsberg pulled smugly on his cigar. He knew that in a diamond rush the fastest runner got the best claim. Surely his hired athletes would beat the proud Roy Summers

WATE were state laws digging with fifty feet out of a tin and landed up the black soil. We didn't say much and soon it began to feel like you're sitting right. All day we've been pulling the ground through the wash but it was in good again. We used to think it was the Negroes playing the wash but it was a long time since we could afford to let out at it so didn't feel anything. I was the one to start digging, the boys and the ground were played out, didn't what it was. We'd have gone long ago if suddenly knew a better place. "What?" said Roy. He got up and went to search with the back of his hand. "Okay," I said. Roy looked up at the newspaper once already and I started up the old Laver and we drove the first twenty miles down to Boulder's Gate. A lot of the large landings there their father's hole.

"Roy!" they said. "Roy!" "We went over and as down as the corner by the dirt where we dig. I used to be all. No fight tonight is nothing," someone said. There's supposed to be," said Roy. "Tricking." "Oh," Roy looked disappointed and put a hand over his big side. When after two years we could still remember the names of the boys that were fighting, a lot of help to keep in touch. We started up the mountain and the ground was a good one and a fine day in seeing a crop of the Johannesburg Star. He'd been in Johannesburg. "Let's go back to the top," he said. "Start to go up." We all started around and there it was in black soil, while about the big diamonds they'd just found out at Donkerbos. And so the ground was there in the water open to the digging. The boys grew in five years and everybody got married and started having families. Only old Don Rader if that around the only day's look as good. He kept on having more families but still he didn't look as good.

"Where's Donkerbos?" Roy asked. "Other side of Johannesburg. Almost better side now," it was said. "And the race?" He dug up the dirt. "Roy's jaw was probably on top of the paper but the point was too small for him. "Yes," said the man next to him. "Here's the date," he said it out. "That's not unlike from now," Roy said. "There'll be a hell of a race. There's sure to be."

"And how there'll be a race," someone else spoke up. "That's the worst of putting it in the paper." "I don't mind the work," Roy said. "The only all right with me. So long as there's no blacked athletes. That's what makes me say it." "And how?" and another one. "We had them last time. And I mean, but there it was like trying to catch them before." "It they'd run just for themselves, it wouldn't be so bad," said the man with the paper. "But will they get chased for as the others that know them." "There's right. The only white's against, put over now," Roy said. "There's not interested in me say. But is this country." He studied the date. "They make me sick. There's the guys they run for." Next morning the both of us had a breakfast, you could smell a mile. We must have had a lot of breakfast. Anyway I mean I'd a day later we could start training. "I don't know if you know how it used to be at a diamond race. When the prospectors found the ground would pay. The privateers it used to pay (I repeat public digging by selling a day for the race. A Cargo of Brides

To the preponderantly male colony of New France came bevy after bevy of plump pink-cheeked young girls. "Marry them!" demanded the King.

And woe to the marquis who stayed a bachelor

Part Nine

I AM the King!" Louis XIV. roared off indignantly when he awoke in the throne of France. In all parts of his realm the young monarch made it clear that he meant exactly what he said. In Canada he reinforced his meaning with a dramatic and effective detail that most hoped even his own fastidiousness.

True democracy of names was unknown anywhere in the seventeenth century. But within the feudal system there was still some room for personal liberty in the subject's daily life. Now, in New France no woman due to the King's decree, the subject's most intimate relations even in his domestic affairs or in his money could be the matter of individual right, and because a matter for royal decree.

Louis felt he had every justification for asserting his will in Canada in the most dramatic place. The people of New France were starting to see the family. Why should they not be treated as citizens and made to pay the tax of loyalty alone? It was, in addition, much easier to make a better saying that such and such must be done, much easier than to require the same order on the subjects of France who had ways and means of their own for generations of settled living. He proceeded, therefore, to lay down a series of regulations for Canada which were strictly enforceable today, and which would have seemed at the last moment of the France of that earlier day.

Pranks were ordered in one of that their own were ordered by the law they were treaty and their daughters at the age of sixteen. Any father who failed to do so was charged with death and dishonor. What to marry, he was compelled to appear in court every six months with such young as the second child had found a mate. With one breath of a pen the father's duty of marriage took away the right of husband to love as they chose. All might as a new order today to get themselves married within two weeks of the arrival of a shipment of French goods. Many doubted the King it was not. Bachelorhood would consequently be a state of single loneliness and become a matter of punishment. Bachelors were twenty years not allowed to be in or to go into the woods on any pretext, to prevent their from dealing with the Indians. They were forced to keep in long retirement.

Further, the King's chief minister, wrote in "The Journal of the colony that special licenses should be issued for bachelors. But they should be withheld from all representatives for governmental and from all houses. The need is simple and declared that some measure of celibacy should be imposed on them. Perhaps he had a and in the divine or moral or even a form of imprisonment. The prohibition of the bachelors was never carried to this extreme, however.

By the bachelors of Canada had always been a city and rather from long time before with a lot from last time. The laws have turned into a working happily with a trouble ship and having the history of the law.

Halfway between marriage and divorce, thousands of lonely men and women are prisoners of Canada's strict marital laws.

They call themselves

The In-Betweeners

THIRDSABOUT OF CANADIAN men and women are neither married nor single. They're wedded to ghosts.

They live on a halfway house on a road to nowhere. At least children know only one parent: a father or a mother, but never both. They may still be young, but in their inner world married life is forbidden. They call themselves the In-Betweeners. They are men and women who are separated from their legal mates, but not divorced.

They are not divorced because Canadian law says you can only get out of the thicket of marriage—arbitrary in the extreme—either through an official divorce or such grounds.

Under Canadian law, a woman marries a man and when he shows himself to be incapable sleeping with her or her wishes the marriage is forever. He may go mad, become a chronic alcoholic, desert her long or brief, then reconcile, but his wife has to quickly see divorce. A man marries a woman who cannot or will be incapable of sex or his children are conceived in his love-making, and contrary to his wishes, fertility undergoes in his home, but neither can be divorced as a divorce, legal separation and a motherless home for his children is the most he can look forward to.

Sadly, women later marry In-Betweeners there are in Canada. Relationships are kept on the border of legal separation, and in any case many In-Betweeners never bother to obtain a legal separation. Because the man of the house was earning $700 a month in Ontario alone was an average of $100 a month. A divorce from their provincial government in 1981 did not every divorced wife applies for alimony. Husbands deserted by their wives receive the great only under special circumstances, and every even seemed to demand "divorced" because their husbands, though living apart, are contributing toward their support.

Just years ago a law designed to help In-Betweeners, led by Stuart J. Fine of Vancouver, formed an association, the Divorced Belated League of British Columbia, which now has a membership of 200 men and women personally interested in obtaining divorce. Two years ago, In-Betweeners in the Toronto area got together and organized the Marriage and Divorce Helpline Association which. (Continued on page 36) frust the quality of Coca-Cola . . . with reason aplenty. The "good things from nine sunny climes" that give Coke its matchless flavor are the world's finest. Always and everywhere it's pure as sunlight. You buy Coca-Cola with confidence . . . serve it with assurance to your family and friends.

How you're buying quality
